As I write this article everyone is busy getting ready for the State Convention. We have Council Meetings, District Meetings, and Zone Meetings throughout the year but the Convention is the place that once a year we get to Celebrate Lionism on a State Wide Basis with our fellow Lions. By the time you read this our 2013 Convention will be history. I hope you were a part of that history, if not; make it a part of your 2014 calendar. Over the last month I have been privileged to watch and help Lions at work. We have been cleaning up parks and cities, we have taken care of the vision problems for a lot of people, we have cooked and delivered food for the homebound people who can't care for themselves, we have brightened the outlook of our fellow citizens, and the list goes on and on. Every Community has different needs and every Lions Club works at supplying those needs.

I was a part of a group of Lions that visited a club who had decided to close its doors. The Vice Governor found out and immediately went into action. She asked for Lions to come help her help this Club. The Club saw from the outpouring of Lions who came to their meetings that they were "needed" in their town, District, and State. They now have new Officers, a new project, and a fresh outlook.

Make it a part of your clubs program to go on Club visits and show support for your fellow Lions. We will lose a lot fewer Clubs when they know they are an integral part of a Team. Ask your District Governor Team for the names of some clubs that need the most help from a visit or two.

One last thing.....invite someone to help you with a Lion project and then invite them to be a Lion.

Troy Jenkins Oklahoma Lions Service Foundation Executive Director

“Look, mister, there's two kinds of dumb. Uh, guy that gets naked and runs out in the snow and barks at the moon, and, uh, guy who does the same thing in my living room. First one don't matter, the second one you're kinda forced to deal with.”

Chelcie Ross as George in Hoosiers

I have been a movie buff my entire life. I love all genres of movies: foreign films, documentaries, comedies, silent films, etc. I love to watch horror movies with my wife, who fails to see the charm in a movie without blood and guts, or at the very least, explosions and car chases. She cannot (or will not) see the point in what she likes to refer to as “Oscar Winners.” Whether they actually won an award or not, she is referring to the type of films that are often character-driven, and might have a sad or ambiguous ending, that often rack up the hardware during awards season.

My love for film goes deep enough that at one point I was actually a double-major in film and professional writing with an eye toward a career as a screen-writer (or at the very least, a film critic). Common sense won out, however, and my goal of achieving actual employment after college led me to switch my major to advertising. Movies still mean a lot to me, though. Perhaps no genre more so than sports films. Sports films just get to me. It is not uncommon for me to get a lump in my throat and a little mist in my eyes during the closing scene of a sports movie (though this illustrates another great thing about movies in general – it's usually too dark for anybody else to notice).

I know I am not alone in this. How many of you “got something in your eye” when Rudy sacked the quarterback at the end of Rudy? Let's face it – it really is not a great movie. That does nothing to change the fact that I blubber like an infant every time I see Rudy running onto the field. I have seen Remember the Titans many, many times. This is a good movie, with many solid performances, but does get a little too Disney at points. Regardless, I am still sitting on the edge of my seat every time I watch the last play of the state championship game. It makes no difference that I know exactly what is going to happen. I will not even discuss my feelings about the original Brian's Song.

I think there are many elements that provide universal appeal to sports movies. They often embrace the underdog. More often than not, the heroes come from divergent backgrounds and are forced together by circumstances. In the end, everybody comes together as a team to achieve a goal, and while victory is not always the outcome (Rocky, Cool Runnings, and Mystery, Alaska to name just a few examples), the characters are better for the journey. Another common theme is the leader trying to shake up the status quo and buck convention. Whether it is Denzel Washington as Herman Boone in Titans, Gene Hackman as Norman Dale in Hoosiers, or even James Gammon as Manager Lou Brown in Major League, these leaders are often chastised, criticized, and ostracized for their radical thinking.

Perhaps no movie captures this spirit better than Hoosiers. Norman Dale is brought in from nowhere to lead a small-town basketball team in a community that revolves around high school basketball. Most of the townsfolk do not initially warm up to him; when he tries to change routine, it gets even worse. Norman has a run-in at his first practice with George, a local who feels like the team should just stick to their old ways, and takes exception when Norman tells him, in no uncertain terms, that that is not going to happen. This, of course, leads to the quote at the beginning of this article.

In some ways, this is a lot like life in the Oklahoma Lions. ooHH We are all coming together from different backgrounds, vocations, etc., to achieve a common goal: service to our communities. We are often looked at as underdogs, especially when it comes to getting the next generation involved and committed. And maybe most of all, “radical” ideas that stray from convention (not to mention the people that bring them) are often viewed as an affront to a way of life and an existing commitment to service. However, if these movies teach us anything, it is that sometimes that radical idea is exactly what it takes to get the team to bond and eventually reach new levels of success.

It is in this vein that we should consider the following ideas and principles: Leadership has nothing to do with titles. Just as the leaders in these movies are often somebody other than the coach, leadership can come from anywhere within our organization. Whether somebody has been a Lion for 50 years or two months, their ideas and enthusiasm are valuable, regardless of their position within the club. New ideas (new projects, new fundraisers, new thinking in general) should not be feared. A new idea that might seem radical should not be dismissed simply because it is different than what has been done in the past. For that matter, just because something was tried in the past and failed does not mean that it will not work now. Times change; we need to change with them.

Remember, Norman Dale took the Hickory Huskers (personal side note – what a great name for a team!) to the state championship. Herman Boone took the Titans to the state championship. While Rocky did not win the title, he took the champ the distance (and eventually beat him in the sequel, and ran on the beach with him in the next sequel; really a strange turn of events if you ask me). And Brian Piccolo became the starting full-back for the Bears before...well, never mind. To paraphrase the voice in Field of Dreams, “If you try it, they might come! And to paraphrase Kevin Costner in Bull Durham, I believe that as Lions, We Serve!”

Congratulations to First National Bank in Wewoka, recipients of the 2013 Oklahoma Lions Humanitarian Award! Through the efforts of the bank and PDG Greg Arbuckle thousands of dollars worth of Lions contributions to the Building the Foundation program are processed every year through free automatic withdrawals. Thanks, Lion Greg, and First National Bank, for all that you do! You Serve! (Left to Right) 3K Governor Billy Thompson, Greg Arbuckle, and PID Scott Storms

Now for the essential yet mundane requirement such as reporting newly elected officers information to both the state and international office of Lions clubs this must be accomplished in a timely manner.

HOOKER LIONS has finally received their reinstatement, and they have a second beginning with some changes of line-officers. Again, with thanks to Guymon Lions GMT Charles Michael for his diligence in making sure their "t's" were crossed and their "i's" dotted. A "Tip of a Lions Cap" to Lion Charles!

Have a good Lion's day, a better Lion's week, the best Lion's month ever, an exceptional Lion's Year and a wonderful Lion's Life!
