The new facebook category is the new set ", features support up to eight people in Facebook Messenger or up to 50 people who use messenger rooms. However, you decide to structure your digital party, it's a convenient way to make view All (and comment) all the same videos at the same time. Group watching is not a unique feature these days. However, Facebook implementation allows you to watch both the video and your camera companions Chatters, feed In the same window as the app, adding a new turning point compared to most other party watch features. This should make you look together to feel a little more communal - until you really care about the video content on Facebook in first post.Watch Together it can only be used for video loaded or streaming on clips created by the user of Facebook and Live Streams include most of the VID content EO of Facebook, making the function better to share personal videos or meme with people who are not able to see often. Probably it doesn't work for your next night movie or binging a season of a show with your long distance friends, unless you think you look at something from the small selection of Facebook of exclusive movies and web series. Facebook announcement post says it will add the most produced content in the future, and although there are some decent things available, it's still quite thin for now. Frontal restrictions on side, look together is easy to get configuration: Start a group video call in Messenger or Messenger Rooms.swipe up to open the in-call menu. Touch "Watch together." Select the video you want to look with your group. The app will display a list of suggested videos when selecting "Watch together." or you can use the search bar to find a specific page or video. You can also browse a list of other categories: "TV & Movies" includes original and third-party titles available through Facebook; "Music" includes recapient and video shows Musical; "Live" All the flows live on-air that happen at that time. "Uploaded, "It lets you share videos You've Uploaded on Facebook. "Hatched, "a video history You've seen already. Facebook says the rollout will hit its various messenger apps in the coming weeks, so if you give a messenger clock. Try and can't find it, hold a little longer. Meanwhile, we can show you how to organize a movie night long distance using movie anywhere or synchronized shows on BBC, Hulu, Disney +, or Netflix so you can watch with your friends remotely. Facebook today is rolling a new feature that will allow friends and family to watch videos together on Messenger. The feature, called together "Watch together." works with all the video content of the Facebook clock, including its original programs, user loadings, user loadings, the content of the Creator, live streaming and, soon, music videos. At the time of launch, the co-watching experience can be used by a maximum of eight people in a video chat messenger on mobile phone, or up to 50 people in messenger rooms . The Covid-19 pandemic has encouraged a number of services of streaming - including Hulu, Plex and Amazon Video - to adopt similar co-viewing features, or at least, not officially allow third-party apps that allow co-observation, as the Netflix party. However, Facebook did not go to jump on this baby carriage. In reality he announced to his developer conference F8 two years ago his plans to develop a co-viewing experience for Messenger. And The product is Stat or in since. Image credits: Facebook roll-out something as co-observation through messenger is a remarkable technical challenge. I Service Gangs in the Facebook Clock Cdn (Content Distribution Network) to pull videos in Messenger. It has therefore developed a system that allows narrow synchronization between the various user flows of the same video. Even that can be difficult, since someone in a rural area can have more slow bandwidth speed than someone in an urban subway, but the service must make sure they are "The same part of the video at the same time. Image credits: Facebook To use the function, users must be before a Messenger video call or a Messenger Camera, Cana T be started from the Facebook card looks or elsewhere. From Messenger, They re-enable a co-watching session by selecting the new option from a drawer pulling from the bottom of the screen. Initially, this feature is only available on iOS and Android mobile devices, Facebook says. From the interface that appears, users can then browse or try to find something to look together. Facebook contents Watch is organized into categories like a TV & movie, "Watched" (on your recently viewed website), an uploaded (your videos) and a suggested. While users can create users Playlists or queues, all participants can help choose videos. Ie, there's not one person to direct the experience for others. Everyone can also stop, pause or jump back or back in the video, too. Although many can use the function of a sort of lean-back co-watching experience, it has other potentialities. For example, a group could meet to watch a fitness video and work together. Although official music videos have become recently available on Facebook looks, thanks to the facebook's new agreement with record companies, They're king not immediately available in this co-observation experience. However, Facebook says that they will be added in the coming weeks, initially in the United States, India and Thailand to start. Each market will also be located located in the content below "TV & Movies" section, too. The function will start on a global rotation through iOS and Android, but Facebook intends to have web support ready in a few weeks, and other platforms, such as desktops, will follow. Source: Central Android Facebook is launching a new feature known as a clock together. It will be available on Messenger for both iOS and Android. A precise denomination case, the function allows you to view Facebook videos together with your friends even if obviously virtually. Like the summer months wind down and move in the months tempora, it is going to be much more difficult to relax and socialize with friends. As such, Facebook is expanding Messenger functionality set with clock together, a new tool that will allow you to watch videos with your friends on a video call. You will work with both one-to-one Messenger and Messenger cameras video calls, and a user can share any video that you can find on Facebook Watch. Facebook probably figures that as there are more than 200m shared videos on Messenger and more than 100m video calls made daily, a bit of rationalization may not hurt. Source: Facebook Writing today, by Facebook Nora Micheva Explained: Even if it is not as good as a first-part implementation, Netflix party was an extension that offered a similar experience for video-video subscribers much more popular. That explode in popularity this year. Whatever you hear about it, it's clear that there is a growing appetite for this type of function (which and the pre-existing watch party trend), and Facebook is taking advantage of that to attract more people to use Facebook Watch. Best Android Messaging Apps in 2020 Source: newsroom.fb.com in Facebook's F8 conference of developers in San Francisco, the social network has announced that it will allow developers to create applications that integrate with Messenger, its messaging application that now it has 600 million, monthly active users. Facebook Managing Director Mark Zuckerberg said that Facebook is wanting to make it easier for users to share more content through the The social network presented more than 40 new apps that allow users of "their conversations with gifs, photos, videos, videos, audio clips, and other forms of "pressive expression ". You can discover these apps via the composer or tap install when a friend sends you a message from a Platform Messenger app. Facebook's Messenger head, David Marcus, former Paypal president, said more than 40 application applications Participate in the launch of the Messenger platform. These first apps are available on Messenger Now and Facebook has already opened the Messenger platform to developers. In a post on his developer site, where he lists the first 47 apps integrated with Messenger, Facebook explains: with the Messenger platform, the app content can be shared through private messages
