(November 2010) (Learn how and when to remove this template message) Mix of wedding invitations from Chinese and Western styles An invitation to a letter asking the recipient to attend a wedding. It is typically written in the formal third-person language and mailed five to eight weeks before the wedding date. Like any other invitation, the privilege and duty of the host-housewife or your social secret to selecting the guest list and address envelopes, or by hiring a service. With computer technology, some are able to print directly on envelopes from a list of guests using an email mix with word processing software and spreadsheet. History Of The Average Age and before the invention of Johannes Gutenberg's mobile press in 1447, marriages in England were typically announced by a city nailer: a man who walked the streets aloud announcing the news of the day. Traditionally, anyone within reach became part of the celebration. Media families would commission monks, skilled in the art of calligraphy, to craft their warnings. Such documents often carried the coat of arms, or personal crest, of the individual and were sealed with wax. From 1600 onwards Despite the emergence of the printing press, the common printing technicalities of the era, in which the ink was simply stamped on the Using the type of lead, it produced a very poor result for stylish invitations. However, the tradition of announcing marriages in the newspaper has become established at this time. On 1642, the invention of the metal plate engraving (or Mezzotint) by Ludwig von Siegen brought wedding invitations of higher quality within the reach of the mother class. Emerging day. [1] Engraving, as the name implies, requires an artisan to "hand write" the reverse text to a metal plate using a sculpture tool, and the plate was then used to print the invitation. The resulting engraved invitations were protected from being crushed by a tissue paper sheet placed on top, which is a tradition that remains until today. In the Well, the text of the wedding invitations was more elaborate than today. Normally, the name of each guest was printed individually on the invitation. The Industrial Revolution following the invention of Lithography by Alois Senefelder in 1798, it became possible to produce very unappreciated and distinctive paints without the need for engraving. [2] This paved the way for the emergence of a real mass market in wedding invitations. The wedding invitations were still delivered to mother and horseback, however, due to the lack of reliability of the incoming postal system. The invitation was used to protect the invitation of damages on the way to the receiver. This mantle tradition Today, despite progress in the reliability of the post office, they are continuing. Modern times The origins of fine marriage stationery in the market can be traced to the period immediately after World War II, where a combination of rapid industrial democracy and growth gave the common man the ability to imitate the lifestyles and materialism of the elite of society. This is Poca, prominent figures of society, such as Amy Vanderbilt and Emily Post, have come to advise the common man and woman on proper etiquette. The growth in the use of wedding stationery as well as has been supported by of thermography. Although it doesn't have the delicacy and Recording, thermography is a less expensive method of reaching the high type. This technique often called the poor man's recording, produces bright, high letters without impressing the surface of the paper (in the way the traditional recording). As such, wedding invitations, printed or engraved, have finally become accessible to everyone. More recently, Letterpress's impression resurfaced strongly in the popularity of wedding invitations. It has a certain boutique and crafts appeal due to deep impression or bite that can be reached. It was not the original intention of writing to bite the role in this way, but rather kiss him by creating a flat impression. The bite or deep impression is a recent estate that adds sensory touch to letterpress wedding invitations printed. Many letterpress printers that specialize in wedding invitations are small start-ups or handmade printers, in short of large printing companies. Laser recording has also progressed in the market for wedding invitations over the last few years. Primarily used to record wooden foliage invitations, it is also used to record acrylic or to mark certain types of metal invitations. The last tendency in wedding invitations is ordering online. The use of the Internet has made visualization, organization and requests for wedding invitations an easy task. There are hundreds of websites that offer wedding invitations and stationery and being online allows the customer to ask anywhere in the world. Text label on text on a formal wedding invitation varies according to the country, culture and tongue. In the Western countries, a formal invitation is typically written in the formal, third-person language, saying that the hostesses want the recipient to compare to marriage and give their date, time and place. In some not Western countries, such as India, where the concept of invitations marriage was acquired through The English language continues to follow the West As the bride's parents are traditionally the wedding hosts, the text usually begins with the bride's parents' names as they use them in formal social contexts, for example, "Mr. and Mrs. John A Smith" or "Dra. Mary Jones and Mr. John Smith". The exact wording varies, but a typical phrase is as follows: A modern wedding invitation, Mr. and Mrs. John Smith asks for the honor of your presence at the wedding of your daughter Jessica Marie to Mr. Michael Francis Miller on November 1 at the noon of Christchurch Hall Richmond, Virginia Marriage invitations sometimes include 'honour' spelling, even in the United States, where 'u' is not correct in any other context, regardless of formality. This practice derives from a decision established by Emily Post in the 1920s. In the United Kingdom, the "request...presence" line is used when the ceremony is held in a cult house; "pleasure of your company" is used when it is held elsewhere [necessary quotation] If the bridegroom's parents are also wedding hosts, then their names can also be added. If parents are not the wedding hosts, then the host name is replaced on the first line, or, especially if the bridegrooms are themselves hosts, it can be written in the passive voice: "The honor of your presence is requested in the marriage of..." Formal ads, sent after the wedding ceremony, omit the time and sometimes the place, but usually keep the same general form. Informal invitations, suitable for less formal marriages, are issued by mouth to mouth or by handwritten letter. As long as they transmit the practical information necessary about the time and place, there is no defined form for these invitations. Printing and drawing Commercial wedding invitations are typically printed using one of the following methods: recording, lithography, thermography, typographical printing, sometimes blind embossing, processCompressed plate, or offset printing. More recently, many many Brides are printing on their home computers using a laser printer or inkjet printer. For the artistically inclined, they can be made by hand or written in calligraphy. Historically, wedding invitations have been written by hand, unless the length of the guest list made it impractical. [4] When mass production was needed, engraving was preferable to another widely available option, which was a relatively poor quality of print printing of letters. Invitations written by hand, with the very letter of the hosts, are still considered more correct whenever possible; These invitations follow the same formal third-person form as the formal formal marriages and take the form of a personal letter for less formal weddings. [4] Wedding invitation cover fabrics are often provided by manufacturers to put on printed text. Originally, the purpose of the fabric was to reduce dirt or stains, especially in poorly printed or hurriedly sent invitations before the ink was completely dry, but improved printing technical means that now they are simply decorative. [5] Those who know that their original purpose has been rendered irrelevant by dramatic improvements in printing technology generally discard them. [6] The design of modern invitations follows the trends of fashion. Invitations are generally chosen to match the couple's personal preferences, the formality level of the event, and any planned color scheme or theme. For example, a casual beach wedding can have light, cool colors, and beach-related flowers. A formal church wedding may have more scripture typographies and lots of ornaments that correspond to the formal nature of the event. The design of the invitation is becoming less and less traditional and more reflective of the couple's personality. Some companies in On web-on-demand now allow couples to design or customize your own wedding invitations. An example of a foil modern wedding invitation most recently in 2019, stamping on aluminum paper and polishing invitations turned to fashion. Fantosforo Become Wow. applied through the application of a thick layer of toner to a paper using the four CMYK colors and a fifth white colour, then the card fed through A paper heat transfer machine where the sheet is glued to the toner and the drawing [citation required] Typically a note card, folded in half, or perhaps folded in French (double-folded in rooms). Other options include a paper sheet, a triple one, or a pocket invite in fashion. The proper paper density depends on the drawing, but typically varies from heavy paper to paper. the stock of very strict cards. There's also in acrylic invitations. Mailing Traditionally, the wedding invitations are sent in double envelopes. The inner envelope can be lined, no Gummy gum, and it fits in the outer envelope. The outer envelope Gum for sealing and addressing. More recently, the inner envelope often left out in the interest of saving money, paper, and mail. In some cases, a pocket fold takes the place of an inner envelope. In the countries that issue them, the envelope may be stamped with love stamps. The United States Postal Service issues an annual love stamp specifically named to cover the double weight of the invitation and respond (a fee slightly lower than the cost of two regular stamps). Answer As with any invitation, the only obligation of the person who receives it is to reply, as promptly as reasonably possible, so that hosts know whether or not they can attend[7] The reception of a wedding invitation does not oblige the recipient to attend the wedding or to send a gift. An adequate response to written on the normal letter paper of the recipient, following the form of the invitation. For example, if the invitation uses formal language, third person, then the recipient responds in formal language, third person, saying "Mr. Robert Jones gladly accepts the amenable invitation to the wedding First of November, "or" Mrs. Susan Brown regrets that she can not be present at the wedding on the first of November "November" Response cards for addressed and practices stamps are often sent in the hope of encouraging a greater offer of people invited to respond to the invitation. Some American experts on etiquette consider the practice incorrect and ineffective at increasing response rates[8] Other articles Other than in the invitation itself, sellers promote a full panoply of optional printed material. The set can include an RSVP response card, a separate invitation to a wedding reception, and information such as maps, directions, child reception options, and hotel accommodation. The wedding invitations should be sent six weeks before a wedding, with a little more time to be given to out-of-town or destination weddings. Guests should be invited to have their answer given between three and two weeks before the wedding date. Although many couples request RSVP to be returned by then One month before the wedding day. These printers also They sell matching parts for the wedding day, such as programs, menus, table cards, place cards, as well as wedding favours and party favours, such as napkins, cup bases, cocktails stirrers and forum boxes. In pop culture in Seinfeld's "The Invitations", George Costanza Susan's fiancée killed by licking the topical wedding invitations that George chose because they were cheap.
