Most of the mini-classes last about 5 to 20 minutes and include a direct statement and a model of the concept by the teacher, followed by a class discussion and the execution of the concept. Miniatures can be given individually, in small groups or in a whole class. A mini-class template is divided into seven sections: the main theme, materials, connections, direct instruction, guided practice (where you write how you actively involve your students), link (where you connect the lesson or concept with something else), independent work and share. Describe specifically what the lesson is about, as well as what main point or point will focus on when presenting the lesson. Another term for this is "objective" to ensure that you know exactly why you are teaching this lesson. What do you need students to know after the lesson is completed? After the objective of the lesson is perfectly clear, explain it in terms that your students understand. Gather the materials you will need to teach the concept to students. Nothing is more disturbing for the flow of a lesson than realizing that you do not have all the materials you will need. The attention of students will surely decrease abruptly if you have toto gather materials in the middle of a lesson. Activate previous knowledge. This is where you talk about what you taught in a previous lesson.example, you could say, "We learned yesterday about..." and "Today we will learn about..." Demonstrate your teaching points to students. For example, you could say, "Let me show how I..." and "A way I can do that is for..." During the lesson, make sure that: Explain teaching points and give examples Model showing how students will accomplish the task they are teachingPermit guided practice, where you walk around the room and help students while practicing the concepts you are teaching During this stage of the mini-lesson, train and evaluate students. For example, you can start the active engagement part by saying, "Now you're going to go back to your partner and..." Make sure you have a brief activity planned for this part of the lesson. This is where you will review the key points and clarify if necessary. For example, I could say, "Today I taught you..." and "Every time you read you will..." Have students practice working independently using the information they have just learned from their teaching points. Let's meet as a group and let the students share what they learned. Students can do it independently, with a partner, or as part of the entire classroom group. Ask the students: "Did you use what you learned? Did it work? How will you use it next time? What kinds of things would you do differently? "Stop any loose ends and use this time to instruct more. You can also tie your mini-lesson into a thematic unit or if the theme justifies another discussion, you can increase the mini-lesson by creating a full lesson plan. plan.
