Choosing between monofocal and multifocal cataract surgery depends on individual needs. It's crucial to consult with an eye doctor to determine which procedure is suitable for you. Regular eye exams with a personal eye care physician ensure early detection of potential problems. Biennial eye exams are vital for preserving vision health and preventing serious issues like glaucoma. Clewner & Kelly Eye Center provides essential testing procedures to assess full eye health, ensuring ocular well-being through regular appointments. Going for regular eye check-ups is a must, especially if it's been over two years since your last comprehensive assessment or you're experiencing vision problems. Clewner & Kelly Eye Center in Boca Raton, FL can help you with this. Even if you have perfect 20/20 vision or wear glasses all the time, getting your eyes checked regularly is essential for maintaining eye health and catching any potential issues early on. During a routine eye exam at Clewner & Kelly Eye Center, you can expect to spend about an hour in the office. The process starts with a visual acuity test to determine how sharp your vision is. If needed, refraction testing will be done to find out what prescription you need for glasses or contacts. Next, a visual field test will measure your peripheral vision and help detect other eye problems. Additional tests might include a cover test, color vision test, slit lamp test, and more to assess the overall health of your eyes, including your eyelids, cornea, lenses, and iris. It's also beneficial to use eye drops to dilate your pupils so that the doctor can thoroughly check the retina, optic nerve, and macula for any potential issues. Even if you get healthy results, it's still important to schedule regular eye exams every 2-4 years to catch any new problems before they become major issues. This is especially true for kids who are more likely to develop vision problems, with statistics showing that 25% of them already have a vision issue. The American Optometric Association recommends babies get their first eye exam at six months old and then every two years after that. They will be addressed and treated as soon as possible if any issues are found during the exam. You may need to schedule a follow-up appointment for further testing or treatment if necessary. Remember that dilation of your pupils might be required, so consider bringing an adult who can drive you home after the exam if needed. Eye Exams FAQ Do insurance plans cover eye exams? Most companies do, but we recommend verifying your coverage with your provider. Before performing the exam, our team will help you understand your coverage and inform you of any estimated co-pays. How often should I have an eye exam? Patients between 18-60 should get an exam every two years, while those over 60 should have them more frequently due to age-related vision deterioration. Those with chronic eye conditions or diseases may need exams more often. What does a comprehensive eye exam entail? A thorough examination includes visual acuity testing, depth perception assessment, color vision evaluation, overall eye health checkup, pupil response analysis, and an examination of the retina and optic nerve. Will my eyes need to be dilated? The purpose of the exam and your eye's health determine whether dilation is necessary. However, not all exams require dilation, and your eye care professional will decide based on your individual situation. What is the puff of air test during an eye exam? This noncontact tonometry test measures the pressure inside your eyes to help detect glaucoma early. How should I prepare for my eye exam? Bring your current prescription, a list of medications you're taking, and information about any eye problems or concerns. If you wear contact lenses, bring the box or details of the brand.
