One pager presentation template

A pager is a very simple radio that only listens to a station all the time. A radio transmitter transmits signals on a specific frequency. All pagers for that particular network have an embedded receiver that is tuned to the same frequency transmitted by the transmitter. The seekers listen to the signal from the transmitter constantly until the pager is on. Each pager has a specific identification sequence called the Access Protocol Channel (CAP). The pager listens to his unique CAP code. When you hear the code, notify you and may provide additional information, depending on the type of page. There are five basic page types: Beeper - The first and easiest form of paging, beepers provide a basic notice to the user. They are called beepers because the original version made a dazzling noise, but the current pagers in this category vary in the type of alert. Some use audio signals, others light up and some vibrate. Many of them provide a combination of alerts. This is the category where most of the restaurant players fall. Voice/Tone - These users provide the ability to listen to a recorded voice message when you are advised to have a page. Numeric - These pagers provide the possibility to send a numerical message, such as a phone number, along with the page notice. Alphanumeric - These pagers provide the possibility to send a text message along with the page notice. Two ways - These pagers provide the possibility to send and receive messages. Regional and national pay networks have established towers, such as those used for mobile phones, to cover large areas. On-site paging systems such as restaurants use a small desktop transmitter. In the next section, we will take a closer look at this device. The Pagers were a state symbol of the 1980s, worn by doctors, lawyers, public security officials and Wall Street financiers. In the 1990s, visitors had also evolved into a symbol of pop culture. In 1998, Missy Elliott sang "Beep Me 9-1-1-1", and two years later Jay-Z rapped "Motorola two-way page me" on the track "I Just Wanna Love U (Give It 2 Me)." So, what's the status of the pager? Who uses them? And if your first thought is dealers, reflect again — they are most likely passed to anonymous communication applications such as Kik, Confidence or Secret conversations of Facebook. Those who rely on the relic are below: Doctors Surgeons can be quite advanced for remote control robotic technology and perform long distance surgery, but many still use the pagers to communicate. Pagers may seem like a surprisingly low-tech solution for an increasingly high-tech profession, but these beeping devices bare some concernsdata. While using smartphones also requires a way to protect patient data, pagers are a reliable way to get the message across. The simplicity of a pager makes it almost impossible to accidentally transmit sensitive patient data, so there is no useful information to hack. Nuclear EngineersNuclear plants seem relatively rich in technology, technology, But as is a number of nuclear plant operators rely on seekers to prevent things to be melted. Technicians use pagers to send security notices, monitor equipment and also communicate changes to automated processes. It may seem strange to use pagers again, but it can be almost impossible to get internet and cellular signals to penetrate thick cement walls. Pages, but? Beeps for miles. The firefighters and the Emtsamericans are still spending money on pagers. In 2012, the last year for which data is available à € "None actually trace the cost of pager à €" the American spent around $ 7 million on new beepers. And many of them are worn by fire brigades and emergency medical technicians who must be in-call to make help. Pagers keep messages delivered short, at-the-point and easily understood, and do not download batteries like modern smartphones. Bird observers surprised to see birdwatcher in the list? I am here due to an intelligent way they use pagers. Although the use of a birdwatching beeper is less critical than that of an EMT or a firefighter, birdwatcher also need to be learned. They use pagers to enroll in notices on neighboring bird sightings, something that is particularly crucial in large bird watching alloys. It's interesting. When a tornado decimated the city of Joplin, Missouri, in 2011, cellular networks were out of service for four days. Meanwhile, pagers à € "that do not use the same type of transmitter as a mobile phone - they worked fine. The applications of this bank automatically generate text pages with error messages whenever problems occur, report an IT pilot fish that is part of the to-pager port rotation. "You expected to answer a page within two hours," says the fish. "You are not necessarily chained to your home computer, and while the pages were not common, you must still provide a reasonable level of support." A Sunday, I went to our vacation home, about 75 minutes from our house. I chose Sunday to do it because none of our application batch scripts worked on Sundays, so it was extremely unlikely that there would be a page. "But when the fish arrives at the holiday place, suddenly it is the last thing that comes to mind. It turns out that torrential rains raised the level of the vacation home pond from more than six feet, and the Boat pier is floated via - with the fish canoe still stuck on top. Fortunately, the pier is floated at a nearby shore, where the fish can recover it. Take off the socks and sneakers, throw into the water And he succeeds soon to pull the pier and canoe in the bank enough to know that they will not stick again. "He was at this point that I realized that my pager, who was attached to a support on my belt cycle, disappeared," says the fish. "The owner was there, but the pager had fallen somewhere. "Frenchly search the coast, return to the muddy muddy pond, and trace its steps on a hill of 600 feet -- but empty salt. So when he comes back to officeThe next day, the fish must explain to the new IT director who lost the pager and will need a replacement immediately. Answer, your boss Wisecracks, "Oh, so you thought you could avoid losing the seeker, huh?" "Sospin fish", I replied that without the pager, I now had to periodically access the server all night, checking to see if there was any problem. Confidently by making my life easier, now to provide diligent calling service that I would give up a restful night's sleep for the survey frequently for potential problems. "It took three days to get the replacement pager, but the boy was relieved to have one again!" Sharky is checking his email to see if your story has arrived.
